STUDENT-ATHLETE ACADEMIC STUDY OVERVIEW

Andrew High School partnered with UpMetrics to co-create a study to investigate correlations between athletic participation and academic success. The study focused on the impact of athletic involvement on students' academic performance, specifically: GPA, days absent, and standardized test scores. Across the board, student-athletes performed better academically than non-athletes.

"As a Principal, convincing parents of the value in high school participation in athletics and activities has been a focus for years. When we are able to access our own data, in a timely and effective manner, those conversations go from theory to fact. UpMetrics has helped us create a better communication process to coaches, parents, and participants that being involved makes a real difference on grades, attendance, and test scores."

- Robert Nolting, Principal
