FROM: Office of Professional Learning Reviews (OPLR)
SUBJECT: Demonstration of Currency

The University allows students to demonstrate currency with a Professional Learning Review (PLR, formerly APR) credit award in situations where a student earned a credential prior to an PLR effective date period<sup>1</sup>, but believes she or he can demonstrate the body of knowledge represented in the most current PLR report. This approach serves as a hybrid to the traditional portfolio assessment process.

The Demonstration of PLR Currency is determined after a student completes the DoC-PLR application which contains:

1. A completed an PLR Demonstration of Currency Application form
2. A notarized copy of the credential indicating the original date of issue
3. Documentation indicating currency with this credential (notarized as appropriate). Common examples of documentation are a dated renewal certification or letter certifying current employment in the field. Another indication would be a student who holds a credential from the same issuing-organization that is at a higher level than that for which the student is seeking credit.

The application and all corresponding documentation is reviewed by OPLR to determine if the student has successfully demonstrated current knowledge of the subject area content of the credential in question. A phone conference may take place between the application reviewer and the student to clarify any questions that may arise during the review process. OPLR may consult with the school associated with the credential's PLR, as appropriate. An appropriate subject matter expert may interview the student to determine currency with the learning outcomes detailed in the most current PLR report, at the discretion of the school associated with the PLR.

The awarding of credit using the Demonstration of PLR Currency method must be approved by OPLR. A student may appeal a Demonstration of PLR Currency decision to the Office of the Provost.
