No One Fights Alone

ANTHONY'S STORY

Imagine your child wakes up with one side of his face drooping and then he starts dragging one leg as he walks. That's how it started for Anthony. Time for the doctor. The first diagnosis was Bell's Palsy, then possibly a stroke. Then the really bad news: Acute Lymphoblastic Leukemia, followed by "it's the best kind" with a 90% cure rate. Follow a four year treatment plan and things should be okay. Your world is turned upside down learning about the disease, medical terms, trips to Riley's, surgeries, comforting a scared little boy while trying to mask your fears from him, administering toxic chemo to him, and praying. Praying. You settle into the new "routine" which includes constant monitoring, being prepared to make unexpected trips to the emergency room and take ambulance rides to Indy—leaving behind your job, your commitments, and any plans you had. Now, send in the medical bills . . . Just one more thing on your plate. Exhausting. No, exhausting doesn't really explain it. No word exists for the physical, mental, and emotional fatigue. That's what Jerry & Emily Schlund have managed for the past 2+ years with their son, Anthony. His projected date to finish treatments is July of 2019. It's a very long haul. You learn to rely on God for strength & comfort and make fun times happen, even though you are tired beyond words.

If you ask the Schlunds or Anthony, they will tell you they are blessed. There are so many good people that have helped or offered help. There have been unveiled earthly angels (medical staff) that they have met along the way. Their older children have been there for support too. And, Anthony has been a trooper through all of it even though some parts were very, very scary-especially at the beginning. God shows us the blessings in our lives even when we are going through the really tough times. This is a praying family and we KNOW God answers prayers. Because . . . No one fights alone!
